How the world's highest salaried engineer gets his relaxation

To give him needed moments of rest, the rules of a great company are set aside

BRIGHTLY lighted streets and houses—swift elevators—fastmoving cars-these modern marvels of science are possible only because of one tireless brain. It is the ceaseless work of Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz that is the real basis of many of the greatest electrical inventions of

Today he is known as one of the few "hundred thousand dollar" men of America. For years he has been chief consulting engineer of the General Electric Company,

And he alone among the 60,000 workers in this great firm is allowed

His long, thin cigars are almost as famous as his Law of Magnetism. They represent his method of making hours of work and moments of rest

All the world's leaders—all the men and women who have accomplished the most - have had this same faculty. They have known the value of alternating work with brief moments of relaxation. It is only this frequent momentary recreation that has saved them from breaking down under the strain of their efforts.

In order to gain these vital moments of relaxation, Foch discussed theories
